++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Often rather cloudy today. Some rain overnight.

Today:
Early fog patches, dense in places, in the south slowly clearing, then rather cloudy with occasional drizzle over hills in the west. Some brightness to the east of high ground, where it will again feel warm in any sunshine. Maximum temperature 17 deg C (63 deg F).

Tonight:
Little general change through the evening, with plenty of cloud cover. A band of rain will move southwards after midnight, with clear spells to end the night across north Wales. Minimum temperature 6 deg C (43 deg F).

Friday:
Early patchy rain in the south largely fizzling out, with the sunshine in the north become more widespread with time. Despite the sunshine, a cooler feeling day for most. Maximum temperature 14 deg C (57 deg F).

Outlook for Saturday to Monday:
A chilly start, especially further north and east on Saturday but steadily turning cloudier and milder again. Gradually turning more unsettled and breezier from Sunday into next week.
